

A print publishing background equipped us for success in the new media of the World Wide Web. When the first web browsers came along, we saw the perfect fit for print style content

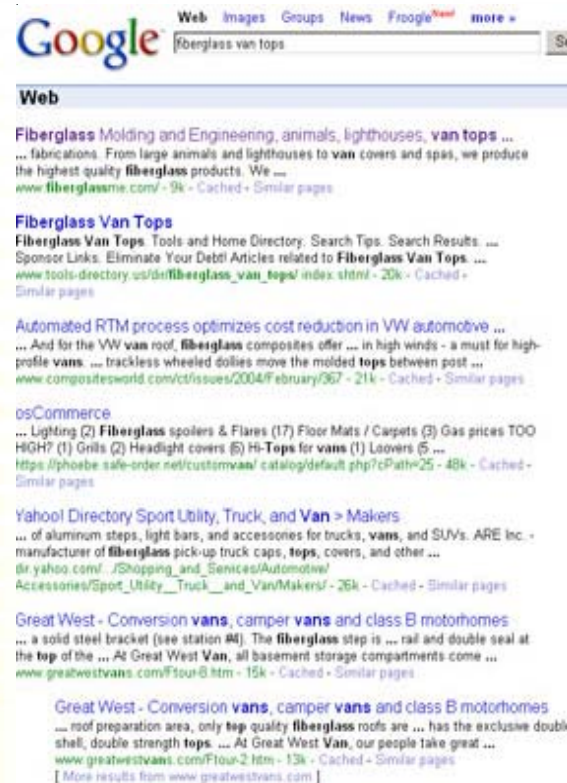

In the early days of the internet, the most popular services were purely text bulletin boards and Usenet news groups. It is today a fact that some of the most popular and visited websites (i.e. macintosh, slashdot, dealmac), do not contain any images or "flash" pages!

Our web design philosophy has always emphasized simple, fundamental design well presented to the largest possible audience. We do not recommend putting flashy design between our clients and their customers. Ease of use and navigability are the top demand of web visitors while cluttered, distracting, hard to navigate confusing websites are the number one complaint!

Today the reality of the internet is universal and global. In North Carolina, 90% of homes and businesses are connected to people searching for information, services and goods. It is critical marketing success to have both a strong professional web presence and a solid search engine strategy.

Search engines make it easy for consumers to quickly find needed information!
